Designed to communicate the artist's studio methodology to a larger audience, these are drawing machines, inspired by artist Paul Klee's Pedagogical Sketchbook . . Painted on handmade papier-mache tiles, the installation is arranged in a square consisting of 100 tiles each measuring 30 x 30 cm.

Paul Klee's persistent shifts in style, technique, and subject matter indicate a deliberate and highly playful evasion of aesthetic categorization. Nevertheless, it is virtually impossible to confuse a work by Klee with one by any other artist, even though many have emulated his idiosyncratic, enigmatic art. So accepted was his.

A similar kind of concentrated connectivity characterises the paintings of Suffolk born UK artist, Amanda Ansell. Since graduating from the Slade School of Fine Art London in 2000, Ansell has been making paintings which reflect upon intimate spaces and the natural environment. Through her work, she considers how we.

I'm such a huge fan of Paul Klee and his recent exhibition at Tate Modern was amazing, but what I really love are his puppets. Klee made his first, not as an artwork, but for his son, Felix's 9th b.
