7 Nov 2005 . The New Yorker, November 7, 2005 P. 62. LIFE STUDIES about Émile Zola and Paul Cézanne. When Émile Zola and Paul Cézanne stopped speaking to each other, they had been friends for 34 years. They met in 1852, at their school in Aix-en-Provence, when they were 12 and 13, and they both cherished.

Paul Cézanne was a nineteenth century artist whose work was misunderstood by his contemporaries. A shy man who worked a great deal in Aix-en-Provence, the home town where he was born and raised, Cézanne moved Paris when he was young and, despite his father's wishes, pursued a career in art rather than law.

23 Oct 2017 . Perhaps everything Paul Cézanne did was a portrait, whether he was painting mountains, fruit, the land, the light, people. Whatever he paints, Cézanne paints himself observing, amplifying, flattening, skipping over one thing to alight on another. Sometimes I think his paintings are about to unravel.
